The Philippines imported 9,676 metric tons of semiconductors from April 1 to May 15, which was down 26 percent from a year earlier, according to the GSMA Intelligence System. Prices of semiconductors, including computer components, dropped 20 percent in April and were largely affected by declining demand in China, where the value of imports fell about 30 percent, according to the survey. Exports rose for the fourth straight month, rising 3 percent to $82.43 million (P1.4 billion). The private sector Department of Trade and Industry expects the Philippines to export $26.4 billion (P504.3 billion) in goods and services in the year ending June 30, down about 12.5 percent from a year earlier due to weaker commodity prices, particularly in mineral products, but more shipments of autos, machinery and construction products. President Rodrigo Duterte on Thursday warned China against using its trade disputes with the Philippines as a pretext to impose stricter controls on its imports. "I call on China not to use the Phl (P15 billion in long-term Philippine loans) given to us as a pretext to impose tougher controls at the ports," Duterte said in a televised interview. He
